

Constitutional Court of South Africa unanimously concluded the death penalty is cruel and unusual punishment subject to elements of arbitrariness and the possibility of error.

The case before the Constitutional Court, Makwanyane and McHunu versus State, stemmed from an intra-family murder-for-hire which occurred in July 1987. Five people died when their hut was set on fire. Both men who carried out the attack and the man who hired them were convicted of murder and sentenced to death. The issues raised before the court concerned not the facts of the crime, but rather the constitutionality of the death penalty. Attorneys for the defendants cited the long history of racial discrimination and the arbitrary application of the death penalty in the United States as grounds for outlawing this ultimate punishment. The South African court heard that the United States practice of leaving capital punishment to the discretion of the judge and jury opens the door to the inevitable influences of race, poverty, and the quality of representation.

In effect, the South African court came to the same conclusion as former United States Supreme Court Justice Harry Blackmun, who concluded that the death penalty experiment has failed. Although Blackmun repeatedly voted to uphold capital punishment in the belief that the law could be channeled to guarantee its fair application, he ultimately decided that he could no longer "Tinker with the machinery of death."

South Africa had a history of applying the death penalty in an even more arbitrary fashion than the United States. Until the use of the death penalty was suspended in February 1990, South Africa had one of the highest rates of judicial executions in the world. The previous government executed 1,217 people between 1980 and 1989. And, as in the United States, it was much more common for a black defendant to be sentenced to death than a white defendant. In 1988, 47 percent of black defendants convicted of murdering whites were sentenced to death; 2.5 percent of blacks convicted of murdering other blacks were sentenced to death; while no whites convicted of killing blacks were given the death penalty.

I want to emphasize that the abolition of the death penalty will not result in impunity for those who commit the most heinous of crimes. But South Africa concluded that even in the country they looked to for guidance, the United States, the death sentence had not been shown to be materially more effective at deterring or preventing murder than the alternative sentence of life imprisonment.

The Government of South Africa has come to the decision that the recognition of the right to life and dignity is incompatible with the death penalty. I applaud them for it.●

MAJ. GEN. DAVID P. DE LA VERGNE

● Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I am honored to offer my congratulations to Maj. Gen. David P. de la Vergne, who retires on June 25, 1995, as commanding general and civilian executive officer of Fort Lawton, WA.

The general's career has been exemplary. A native of Meriden, CT, he graduated from the Citadel and was commissioned a second lieutenant in 1961. After attending the infantry officer's basic and counterintelligence officers course, he served as special agent in charge of the Hartford Resident Office of the 108th Intelligence Corps Group. He did tours in Germany as operations officer of the 207th Military Intelligence Detachment and as commander of the Columbia Field Office of the 111th Military Intelligence Group. Posted to I Corps Advisory Group, Military Assistance Command Vietnam, he served as order of battle advisor and sector intelligence advisor, and then returned from Vietnam to serve as security officer for the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, CA.

After leaving active military duty in 1971, Major General de la Vergne was assigned to the 6211th U.S. Army Garrison, Presidio of San Francisco, where he served as inspector general, S-1, comptroller, and deputy commander before leaving to assume command of the 2d Battalion, 363d Regiment, 4th Brigade, 91st Division, training; Returning to the 6211th in 1981, he served as the garrison commander for 3 years before leaving for the 124th ARCOM, where he served as deputy chief of staff, resource management, as deputy chief of staff, operations, and then as chief of staff and deputy commander prior to his current assignment as commanding general.

Major General de la Vergne is a graduate of the Command and General Staff College and the Army War College, and he has completed courses at the Intelligence School, the Defense Language Institute, the Industrial College of the Armed Forces, the Inspector General School, the U.S. Army Institute for Administration and the Army Logistics Management Center.

His decorations include the Bronze Star, the Meritorious Service Medal with Oak Leaf Cluster, the Air Medal, the Joint Service Commendation Medal, the Army Commendation Medal with two Oak Leaf Clusters, the Republic of Vietnam Cross of Gallantry with Bronze Star and the Republic of Vietnam Honor Medal First Class.

Time and time again, the general has proven his mettle and displayed most excellent leadership. To quote from the citation for his Distinguished Service Medal, which will be awarded on the occasion of his official change of command ceremony on June 25, 1995:

... for exceptionally meritorious service of great responsibility:

Major General David P. de la Vergne distinguished himself by exceptionally meritorious service in successive positions of great responsibility from 15 March 1988 to 27 March 1995. In all assignments, General de la Vergne displayed unexcelled leadership and absolute dedication. As Chief of Staff and later Deputy Commander, 124th United States Army Reserve Command (ARCOM), Fort Lawton, Washington, he displayed exceptional vision, skill, and tenacity in the management and direction of major Army activities. Culminating his distinguished service as Commander of the 124th ARCOM, General de la Vergne took immediate steps to provide the ARCOM with a positive image of its leaders and mission. General de la Vergne's energetic approach for improvement in training, logistics, and recruiting resulted in the molding of a mission-capable unit. His dynamic leadership and unique managerial abilities were instrumental in achieving significant improvements in the readiness posture of the 124th ARCOM elements. This was most evident during the mobilization of nine units to support Operation DESERT SHIELD and Operation DESERT STORM. Major General de la Vergne's unswerving dedication, outstanding service, professional skill, and superb leadership reflect great credit upon him, the United States Army Reserve and the United States Army."

I want to thank Major General de la Vergne for his many years of service to this country, and I wish him and his wife, Elinor, all the best.●

RECOGNIZING THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF DISTINGUISHED ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY YOUTH

● Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, it is with a great deal of pride and satisfaction that I commend to your attention a number of young adults from Anne Arundel County. These outstanding individuals are listed below, and they are outstanding because of their character, their academic achievements, and their contributions to their home communities.

Three years ago, an organization was formed in Anne Arundel County by one of my college classmates, Dr. Orlie Reid. He and other caring individuals gathered together to discuss what could be done to encourage our youth to perform at their highest levels and to be community minded, to reinforce the positive and discourage the negative. The Concerned Black Males of Annapolis has done just that since its inception in 1992.

On Monday, June 26, 1995, CBM is recognizing 88 young men and women at its first annual awards dinner. These students were nominated by church, school and community leaders. I extend my heartiest congratulations to them all for their efforts, and to the organizers of the Awards Dinner and the founders of Concerned Black Males of Annapolis. A concerned community working with youth sets a fine example, and CBM has proven over the years that it works. My best to all of them.●
